Roy Rosenberg Files For GOP Congress Race

By JOHN S. BARCONE, Chairman Republican Central Committee of Los Angeles County

If ever a man was drafted for public service that man is James L. (Roy) Rosenberg.

J. L. (ROY) ROSENBERG

newspaperman and editor of the Inglewood Daily News. He is the unanimous choice of all Republican groups in the 17th congressional district to represent that district as its representative in congress.

Seven months prior to closing time for the filings of political candidates editor Rosenberg was not a candidate for congress. He had discussed his proposed candidacy with the people of the district and with Republican party leaders and had declined to make the race. Tuesday morning, March 26th, public spirited citizens of the 17th district made of a fast trip to the office of County Registrar of Voters, M. J. (Mike) Donoghue, paid the filing fee, took out the sponsorship papers, had them signed by voters in the district, returned to the registrar's office and filed the papers. That's how James L. (Roy) Rosenberg was drafted for public service.

Married, the father of one son who is a veteran of World War II, and himself a veteran of World War I, Rosenberg has served as newspaper manager, editor and publisher in Wyoming, Pennsylvania, North Carolina and California.

The Republican congressional candidate was born in Soda Springs, Idaho, 44 years ago; attended elementary and high school in Kemmerer, Wyoming, and later entered Temple University, Philadelphia. He attended the University of California for a brief period. His varied training before entering newspaper work included work as a public stenographer, civil engineer and law student.

For more than four generations members of the Rosenberg families have been Episcopalians. Rosenberg's grandfather was Episcopal bishop of the diocese of Oregon in 1875, and founded the Episcopal Good Samaritan Hospital of Oregon. Rev. Wallace M. Pierson, now rector of St. Augustine's in the Sea, Santa Monica, baptized and confirmed Rosenberg in the Episcopal faith.

Questions on new flour answered by Carol Drake

Why are we having a "new" flour? The new flour which is now (or going to be) on the market makes it possible to obtain more flour from the same amount of wheat. The purpose of the new flour is to stretch the grain supply and to furnish more bread to the starving people in other lands.

What is meant by 80% extraction flour... That's what the new flour is to be, isn't it? This means that the flour millers will get 80 pounds of flour from 100 pounds of cleaned wheat. Ordinarily 72 pounds of flour, of fine white flour, are milled from 100 pounds of wheat. That extra 8 pounds will make the bread supply stretch to help feed more people.

Will the new flour be as nutritious as regular flour? Yes, if enriched according to present standards, it will be even more nutritious than regular white flour, especially in the B vitamins and iron. Tests on this aren't complete as yet.

Why is the color different? The color is slightly more creamy because more of the darker parts of the wheat kernel are left in the flour.

Can I use the new flour in my regular recipes? Our experiments with the new flour to date show that you can use the flour in your regular recipes without change, but remember they will look a little creamier in color. Remember, too, that as we find out more about the new flour and try it in more recipes, the Homemakers' Bureau will keep you informed.
